Excerpt: . . . 23 Expanded creditors responsibilities for furnishing accurate data. The FACT Act mandated that the federal banking agencies, National Credit Union Association ( NCUA ), and FTC issue joint regulations identifying the circumstances under which furnishers of information would be required to investigate the accuracy of information in a credit report 24 when asked to do so by a consumer; Established a regulatory scheme under which creditors were required to notify consumers when information from credit reports negatively affected the terms of credit, such as interest rates on credit cards and loans. The notification would also have to inform potential borrowers that they could obtain a copy of their credit report from the CRA, without charge; and Strengthened victims rights with respect to identity theft, made credit history restoration easier, limited the sharing and use of medical information within the financial system, required mortgage lenders to disclose credit scores to applicants, and required CRAs to offer credit scores to consumers for a reasonable fee. Finally, as we have noted, the FACT Act created FLEC to improve financial literacy and education and, among other things, required FLEC to increase consumers awareness and understanding of credit reports and scores. Several public and private entities had already undertaken and continue to operate initiatives to increase consumers knowledge of credit reporting issues. Within the federal government, a number of agencies sponsor financial literacy initiatives that include a credit literacy component, such as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporations ( FDIC ) Money Smart program, the Department of Defenses Financial Readiness Campaign, and the Federal Reserves nationwide financial education campaign, Theres a Lot to Learn about Money. In order to fulfill its mandate...
