But after its completion, ready for the press, it was, by consent of its author, placed in the hands of several eminent individuals, for their perusal of the same; who in return, expressed by letters, their high gratification of the merits and principles by which it originated- urging that it should be placed before the Public in pamphlet form, so that all might read, think, understand. It illustrates the varied sensations that man oftentimes encounters; the garb of fear, the powers of sorrow, and the pangs of affliction- when placed under circumstances, such as will arouse the direful feelings within. This is no fiction. No, it is an every-day fact- it being far from the power of man to control his own fears.
