Not illustrated. 1880 Excerpt: . God. With calmness then, born of the divine hope that was within her, Helen surveyed the future. It was not a bright one, as far as the worldly position of the orphans was concerned. In fact, it required a steady courage, and a fortitude, beyond the reach of many, to grapple with. Helen, as she stood thoughtfully before the fire, was revolving it in her mind. She had long been used to struggle with poverty; but if poor before, they would be still poorer now. An annuity, which had eked out their slender income, had died with her father. In fact, the merest pittance was left for the support of the orphans. How could it be made to do? If I could keep the home, thought Helen, it would prevent what few things we have from being broken up. I could work, and Dolores She...
