By the women stirred and tended, In the forest fires were burning, --Steam poured out from pots and kettles, Pans were baking bread, and stewing, --On the spits was here some mutton, There a rabbit or a roebuck, --And the featheis on the herbage Countless chickens indicated. All had diligently striven Special dainties to acquire And to keep the choicest portions For this feast day, more luxurious Than was usual mong the strollers. Wines and liquors were abundant;--Quite embarrassed was Spervogel How to manage and dispose of All the choice selected tidbits. All the many strong potations Which to him were constant tendered. After feasting all hands gathered Neath the trees, and mid the bushes In the autumn slowly yellowing, On the green sward close together, --And when all were quite assembled And in parti-colored raiment Grouped about most picturesquely, Twas a lively, merry assemblage. The autumnal rays of sunshine Every color made conspicuous, --Glowing crimson, garish yellow, Blue and brown and light and dusky Were reflected from bright buttons. Buckles, spangles and embroideries. The expressive countenances Of these hardy wiry people In the sunshine showed up plainly; Sunburned seemed a little darker, Scars were heightened, --folds and wrinkles Shadowed forth with great distinctness, --Round and fresh and youthful faces Rosy-red and blooming sparkled. Old and toughened catgut scrapers Sat around with jugs and goblets, Bent on washing down and flooding With the last drop of the liquors Their insatiable...
