From B to C 29 3 B to D 53 46 B to E 65 53 From E to F 56 9 G to B 88 12 H to B 28 1 . Adjust the protractor, as showns on the zero line AB, its centre at A. Lay weights on it to keep it in position, and with a needle or a very finely pointed pencil prick off the position of all the angles, marking each point with its distinctive letter. Observe that the angle BAF being too large to be measured by the sextant, the angular distance of F from JE? was taken. To protract the angle, it is added to the angular distance of E from B, and the position of 122 2 (56 9 + 65 53 ) pricked off. On the other side of the base the angles are recorded as to instead of from B, as the right hand object is brought to the left in observing with the sextant. This necessitates counting the degrees in the reverse direction on the protractor (see figure), unless, as is sometimes the case, the graduation is numbered both ways on it. The protractor is now taken up, and the lines produced to an indefinite length through the marked points with a perfectly straightedged ruler. The next round of observations is noted thus--The protractor is now adjusted at B, as shown, BA being the zero line. The position of the angles being pricked off,...
