Excerpt: . place round there, said Captain Ballantyre. There ll be too much surf at this side. What do you say, Chips? Shall we go ashore here? It doesn t look exactly homelike, I admit. It certainly doesn t look as if they d got railroads and things running, Chips agreed dubiously. Still, it s there, and we might go further and fare a sight worse. Yes, sir, since you ask me, I say let s run her ashore and take a squint round. Steering far out, to avoid the reef, the skipper rounded the bend of the island, and made for a cove where the waves rippled lazily against the sandy beach. The bay was so clear that they could see the brightly colored seaweed on the white bottom far below, and fish of many hues darting about. A tangled growth of tropical foliage stretched...
