However difficult it may be to define eloquence, its end is perfectly manifest--it is to sway men; not to please them, not to instruct, not to arouse in them the sentiments of justice and truth--but simply to sway them in accordance with the will of the speaker. This is accomplished by bringing the minds of his audience, as nearly as possible, into the same state with the orator s, leading them to think as he thinks or pretends to think, to feel as he feels or affects to feel, in short, to adopt the conclusions which he himself either honestly or designedly maintains at the time. The facilities to such a result must be sought in three sources--the only sources...
