Not illustrated. 1879 Excerpt: .prosperous and happy, or they sink or lapse into their primeval degradation in the ratio that they foster industrial education and inspire productive industry, practice industrial economy and advance in industrial ethics. But in governments like ours--a government of the people--the government as a power has no business intermeddling in these things. The work lies with the people as the fountain of power. Purify the fountain and the stream will necessarily be pure. Honest employment and honest industry, mental and physical, are individual duties that ought to be observed at home, but if the people ignore moral suasion and choose deceptive schemes, and resort to illusory practices to avoid honest work, their government will naturally run in the channel of irresponsibility. We are perhaps more largely indebted to the honest employment and persistent industry, or in common parlance the unrewarded honest toil of working men and women who have passed away, for the world s present accumulated wealth, than we are to the tricks of trade, conquests of government, nations or military chieftains. Ideas and reflections similar to these have doubtless led the honest, industrious women of Louisville to incorporate an industrial enterprise known by the above title. May God speed the day when our good people will awake and realize the intrinsic worth and importance of this movement to make woman s employment more respectable and remunerative. When that day does dawn, the Guild will be exceedingly popular, and the honest working woman will no...
